NECKLACE BY BARBARA DE VRIES

Barbara de Vries is a designer, artist, activist and bookmaker. She lives in Milford and Eleuthera. When Barbara first walked along the beach in Eleuthera in 2006, she was mesmerized by the colors and texture of the surf line – the seeds, shells, seaweed and...tiny brightly colored bits of blue, pink and yellow. Her first reaction was: “how pretty,” but soon realized these were plastic fragments, and that, further up the beach, larger pieces of plastic were scattered everywhere. She went from being charmed to horrified at the implications of the environmental disaster she was witnessing.

All plastic is man made into a form that follows a human function. But beach plastic, after it has been exposed to the elements, takes on an element of nature. Barbara found this combination of design and nature irresistible and started collecting interesting shapes and incorporating them into her designs.

Her collection, Plastic is Forever, has been featured by the Nature Conservancy, Oceana and Surfrider; sold in stores in New York City, The Hamptons, Miami Beach and Eleuthera; and featured by publications including Vogue.com, Ecouterre, Ocean Drive, Treehugger, and Green Planet.

This one of a kind, wearable art piece is made from the spokes of a blue weathered and fossilized crate that was found on Palmetto Point beach in Eleuthera.
